MUSTER-IN OF RECRUITS.

Ceremony of Interest at Center Market Armory. The muster-in of recruits for the 2d Regiment, District of Columbia National Guard, at the Center market armory took place last evening. The regiment was out in force. The drill hall was well thronged with spectators, there was martial music by the National Guard Brigade Band and all in all the affair proved interesting and by the National Guard Brigade Band and all in all the affair proved interesting and novel.

After regimental dress parade the recruits were marshaled by First Sergeant William Walsh, Company A, 4th Battalion, and formed in line in front of the center of the regiment. The soldiers presented arms and the band played the "Star Spangled Banner." Then Colonel Urell addressed the recruits, laying particular stress upon the meaning of the oath of enlistment. As the roll was called by Captain C. E. Swigart, acting regimental adjutant, each recruit raised his right hand and uncovered with his left hand. The oath of enlistment was next administered by Major Charles H. Ourand, inspector general, District of Columbia militia. That ended the ceremony.

The program as published in full in The Star last Saturday was followed. After the military exercises dancing was in order throughout the remainder of the evening, the music therefor being supplied by the band. General Harries, commanding the District militia, and the members of his staff were present as spectators. Colonel Henry May, commanding the 1st Regiment, D. C. N. G., and the members of his staff were present in uniform.

They Are Described by Ex-Consul General

He Questions Their Value Under the Existing Tripartite Agreement With England and Germany.

According to Mr. E. Spencer Pratt, late consul general at Singapore, the treaty re-cently concluded with the Sultan of Sulu by General Bates of the United States army will not give the United States sole jurisdiction over the Sulu Islands, as under a pre-existing convention Great Britain and slands. In a recent statement on the subject Mr. Pratt said:

"This chain of islands, stretching between the Philippines and Borneo, is apt to precipitate all manner of international complications at any time. It may not be generally known in this country that our claim to the Sulu Islands is very limited—generally known in this country that our claim to the Sulu Islands is very limited—that we must stand for all trouble there and yet have no exclusive trading rights in the archipelago.

"A protocol signed at Madrid in 1877 between Spain, Germany and England established free trade in those waters, the Span-Ish government, which exercised nominal suzerainty over the Sulu Islands, relinquishing all claim to exclusive trade.

"This protocol, so far as is apparent upon the face of the peace treaty at Paris, by which the Sulu Islands were ceded to us, has not been abrogated. Presumptively, we have simply taken Spain's part in the tripartite agreement which granted free trade to all nations in those waters, giving the trading ships of the various countries a perfect right to go from port to port. Where, then, are the advantages to this country? We are apt to have trouble with this half-civilized people any day. So numerous are the islands that it would require many garrisons to protect them. Unless we command the trade of the ports, where can possibly be any advantage in owning them and garrisoning them at such heavy expense?" neavy expense?

heavy expense?"
"The Spaniards could not compel a trading vessel to pursue any particular prescribed course or confine herself to trading between special points, and, furthermore, could not levy dues except at the points she (Spain) occupied. These points were essentially few in number.

Always Ripe for Trouble.

"The various chiefs of the Sulus are always watching for a chance to dethrone the sultan. A row is apt to be precipitated at moment's notice, and under the pending reaty the sultan looks to the United States treaty the sultan looks to the United States to protect him and uphold his right to rule. An uprising in the Sulu Islands would be but the beginning of unending trouble, for it would spread to Borneo beyond doubt, because the Sulu people originally sprang from there, and for a long time claimed part interest in the government of Borneo. "This sultanate comprises, or is understood to comprise, some 140 odd islands lying between Mindanao, the southernmost island of the Philippines, and the coast of British North Borneo. The most important of the group is Sulu Island proper. "They are inhabited by a warlike race of Malays, who in early times were converted to Mohammedanism by the Arabs. The population is estimated at about 110,000, including 20,000 or more fighting men. "They have always been a difficult people to rule, and at the time of the recent Spanish evacuation there was an uprising which threatened to overthrow the present sultan before the Americans could arrive, and which, had it succeeded, would have left us to deal with a condition of civil war throughout the Archipelago—a condition we may yet have to face unless we are very careful." to protect him and uphold his right to rule.
